Once you've got it installed and activated, open up Sketch 58 and you'll notice a couple of extra tools: the "Run" command and the "Copy" command. The first thing we want to show you is this: The "Run" command is useful for very specific selections, like layers and design elements such as drop shadows or gradients. You can use it to select multiple cells by scrolling through them using two fingers. The "Copy" command is a really cool feature. It allows you to copy a selection of layers without actually copying them. So, if you have a bunch of text on a layer and you want to copy it from one design to another without having need to move the text, this is your go-to tool. In case you're working on multiple designs at once and want to be able to quickly jump back and forth between all of them, there's a useful trick for that as well: press Command + Tab. It will cycle through the open windows and open up the last one you were working on. You can also use it to access your side projects, designs, your public gallery, etc. That's it for now!
